Bonded Nylon Thread comes in approximately 1 lb. spools and is priced per ounce. Please call for pricing.

Why do we charge by the ounce?

1 pound spools of thread from any mill almost never weigh one lb. Some are fat and some are skinny depending on the mill's spooling. We charge you for the number of ounces that you actually receive.

SPECIAL COLORS ARE AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST BUT MAY REQUIRE A MINIMUM ORDER.

How to Calculate the Total Number of Stitches in a stitch pattern (with a Safety Margin) needed for a required breaking strength:

Stitches needed in pattern = Specific Breaking Strength required divided by Breaking Strength of Thread being Used

Total Stitches with Safety Margin = Stitches needed in pattern + 20%

Example: Using Size 69
= 1,000 lb Required Strength / 9.50 lb. Strength of TH69
= 105.26 + 20% Safety Margin
= 126 Stitches Required

NOTE: Safety Margin percentage used is for example purposes only.

DIMENSIONS AND STRENGTHS

All dimensions and strengths listed in this catalog are actual within reasonable tolerances.

All Hardware dimensions are internal unless otherwise noted.

It is important to understand that the component with the lowest breaking strength in any fastening system will probably fail first. That is to say, any system is only as strong as its weakest link.

PROOF LOAD

The minimum rated strength a component is required to meet, and/or the minimum point before deformation to the part occurs.

WORKING LOAD

The maximum load a component should be subjected to during normal usage. It is recommended for safety purposes that a component's working load capacity not exceed 1/3 of its breaking strength capacity.

BREAKING STRENGTH

The minimum load a component will withstand before failure.

CERTIFICATIONS

Certifications of Conformance and test results are available upon request for most items. Surplus items and "seconds" cannot be certified.

All Loads and Strengths listed in this catalog are manufacturer's rated minimum capacities or applicable military specifications and not those of LOWY ENTERPRISES, INC. except for items made by and tested by LOWY ENTERPRISES, INC.

Breaking strength and working load capacities in this catalog are based on the product being new, and being used under normal environmental conditions. All products are subject to age, wear, and deterioration, which can cause breaking strengths to decrease. LOWY ENTERPRISES, INC. strongly recommends that all products be inspected on a regular basis.
